What does barbie symbolize

The robin symbolizes joy and a sense of renewal. Robins got this symbolic meaning because seeing them is one of the first visual signs that spring is on the way. They are a sign that it's time for people to come out of their homes and enjoy nature again. Some Native American tribes of the Great Plains attributed the sun and its return in the spring with the robin, according to old customs. This is because the dawning of the sun and the red chest of the robin are similar in color. Native Americans also believed that the yellow beak of the robin is symbolic of the rays of the sun. This is why they view the robin as a ray of hope. The Omaha tribes even believed that the sun set and rose with the wings of the robin. Other tribes, including the Shoshone and Iroquois, believe that the rings around the eyes of the robin are a symbol of great wisdom and clarity. In old customs, these tribes called upon the robin during ceremonies to provide them with a clear understanding of what they needed to do. This is also why the elders of the tribe called on robins during moments of uncertainty. Image: Pixabay by Alexas_Fotos Even if you didn't play with Barbie dolls as a kid, you most likely have heard of this iconic doll. Created in 1959 by Ruth Handler, the Barbie doll was meant to serve as an inspiration and a role model for little girls. The marketing for these Barbie dolls started in 1959 as well, with TV commercials causing the sales for these dolls to skyrocket. But it's not just the "Barbie" dolls that people love, as the Ken dolls, dream houses and fancy cars were (and still are) a big hit. Other notable Barbie appearances include Astronaut Barbie, Malibu Barbie, Surgeon Barbie and Gold Medal Barbie.Due to the success of Barbie dolls, a fan club was created, as well as a Barbie convention for fans. Diversity has also played a huge roll in the Barbie universe, with the "dolls of the world" collection showcasing various Barbie dolls from different countries. These dolls have also spawned movies, video games, songs and TV shows, as well as a Barbie smartphone app. And if fashion is your thing, a New York Barbie fashion runway show was actually created in 2009 to honor the iconic and beautiful outfits of Barbie dolls. Yellow can also indicate illness, such as in the yellowing of the skin with jaundice. In some religions, such as Hinduism, yellow represents the gods. Yellow is the most visible color and the one that is processed first in the human eye. Due to this, yellow is often used in signs to indicate an emergency or danger. The color also has several unique meanings in different regions of the world. For example, a bright yellow symbolizes death in parts of Mexico.Yellow is the symbol of courage in Japan, while in China it is used to indicate an adult film. Celebrities share their favorite Barbie memories Steve Granitz/WireImage.com Barbie turns 50 this year, and to celebrate, celebrities share their favorite moments with the doll. We want to hear from you, too: What's your fondest Barbie memory? 1 of 12 Leeza Gibbons "I lived in a tri-level house. And I remember coming downstairs on Christmas morning and my mother was playing with the entire Barbie set that Santa had left me. My kid sister, who's like eight years younger than me, would always take the Barbies and she always wanted to play with me. 'Well, what can I be? Which Barbie can I be?' (she'd ask). And finally I just had enough of it, so I said, 'Okay, you can be my assistant.'" 2 of 12 Billy Bush "Barbie, you and I, we used to play together. It was totally under wraps. It was one of those clandestine relationships I didn't want anyone to know about." 3 of 12 Illeana Douglas "Mine is funny. Well, it's sort of sad. When I was growing up in the '70s, my parents were hippies, and they didn't really want me to have dolls and things like that. So I used to go to my friends' houses and pay with their Barbies, but then they would always have to go away and I wouldn't have one on my own." 4 of 12 Michelle Kwan "Barbie became a figure-skating doll. And I also cut her hair. My sister, Karen, and I would just do these skating moves with it. She would do spirals — you know, what we do on the ice. Especially in a great position, and then she would do these double axels." 5 of 12 Victoria Justice "I had a life-size Barbie. And one day I thought it would be really cool to chop off all her hair and give her a makeover, and my mom got really mad at me and we had to sell it in a garage sale because she was basically ruined. Happy 50th birthday, Barbie." 6 of 12 Lisa Edelstein "I waited two years for a Miss America Barbie Doll, and it never came. Finally I wrote them a really angry letter, and I held on to that angry letter for two years — which really says something about me — and they sent me one." 7 of 12 Debi Mazar "My first Barbie dolls all had haircuts. And Magic Marker makeup and rusty limbs because they all used to have wire in them. So I have a memory of all my Barbie dolls basically being broken and punky." 8 of 12 Neal McDonough "I was the voice of Ken in the Rapunzel video. So I have a very dear, dear spot in my heart for Ken. And obviously, so does my daughter, Catherine. Barbie, happy 50th birthday, and thanks for all the great memories." 9 of 12 Kevin Sorbo "My sister took some of my G.I. Joe dolls and dressed them in Barbie clothes, and I wasn't too happy about that. So I took one of her Barbie dolls and placed her on a bed of firecrackers. And I lit it and blew Barbie up into billions of little pieces. So, here I am saying to a descendant of that Barbie from 1971: I am sorry. I am very very sorry. Brings a tear to my eye." 10 of 12 Melissa Joan Hart "Happy birthday, Barbie. I can't believe you're 50. Thank God you're older than me." 11 of 12 Nigel Barker "Sadly, I grew up with many Barbie dolls because I have two sisters. And they had about 40 Barbie dolls and massive Barbie dollhouses and all the rest of it. And my action men were turned into Ken Barbie dolls. So that's my story." 12 of 12 Patricia Heaton "Barbie, you and I are the same age and I have to say you are aging much better. Happy 50th." Next Barbie's Turning 50! You may be able to find more information about this and similar content at piano.io Here's the backstory: Last year, Nickolay Lamm, a Pittsburgh-based artist who specializes in the makings of Internet-friendly visualizations, designed what he called "Normal Barbie," an attempt to make the doll reflect more typical bodies. Using measurements of an average 19-year-old woman from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, he then molded them to Barbie's 3-D model. The result went viral. Now, just as Mattel has been ramping up a questionable "unapologetic" campaign for the doll—including featuring her in the latest Sports Illustrated swimsuit edition—Lamm has launched a crowdfunding site to produce 5,000 "Lammily" dolls, models that feature average proportions, a light amount of makeup, and bendy joints. It's an alternative, he says, to unrealistically thin dolls like Barbie, or the hyper-sexualized Bratz, which have traditionally dominated the market."I feel like there's a very good chance that those types of dolls affect young girls," Lamm said. "If there's a very good chance like that, and if the average sized doll can actually look good, like Lammily does, let's make it then. If there's even a 10% chance that those dolls affect [body image], let's make it." Researchers at the University Central Hospital in Helsinki, Finland found that if Barbie's proportions existed on a real human being, she wouldn't have the 17% to 22% body fat necessary to menstruate. And while it's difficult to gauge, there is some empirical evidence that Barbie could affect a girl's self-image: A 2006 study published in Developmental Psychology, for example, found that significantly more little girls exposed to images of Barbie (versus exposure to various picture books), reported being unhappy with their bodies and expressed the desire to be thinner then and as an adult.There's no way to tell if it's the dissatisfaction with Barbie's form that has had an impact on Mattel's weakening sales numbers for the doll. Yet, in 2013, Barbie sales slumped by 6%, then showed a 13% drop from the previous year during the holidays. Last month, lead designer Kim Culmone also doubled down on Barbie's proportions in an interview with Co.Design's Mark Wilson, explaining away her starved proportions as necessary for the clothes, and asserting that the body image issue was moot.But when I ask Lamm what he makes of Barbie's strange (and what Culmone would argue as necessary) proportions to service her clothes, he points to the fact that doll clothing could simply be thinner and more flexible. "I'm 100% sure there's something called thinner materials, and that's my response to [Mattel]. I actually put some Barbie clothes on my original model, and she looked pretty good." Lamm will attempt to raise $95,000 to cover the cost of producing 5,000 Lammily dolls. But one of his main challenges will be to get kids to go for something new. Attempts at average-sized dolls in the past have failed to stick around, he says, but he guesses that's because the "average size" sloganeering wasn't appealing to kids. He's not planning on pressing that message."The key to differentiate is that my doll is a cool-looking doll that just happens to be average," he says. "Very few kids are concerned about body image like parents are. It would be like me trying to feed them broccoli."
